Nothing Random is a series of seemingly non-related images. They are essentially stumbled upon images, images found along the journey whilst in the pursuit for something else.

Nothing Random is an ever-changing and evolving body of work, in a constant state of addition and subtraction. Each edit affects the overall and endless picture. New work arrives, or an archival entry shifts the focus anew.

Nothing Random captures objects and places that have found my eye during time spent with other bodies of work. At times they were the distractions one tries to ignore in the name of focus, at others a moment of relief and re-set. They are images in reaction to a specific time and place, documents that capture outposts and rest stops on an unknown road.
